FOREWORD

This book is the outgrowth of an increasing number of requests in recent years for some sort of guide to the many articles and books on Tennessee history. Some of these requests have come from students who wanted to delve more deeply into the rich lore of Tennessee's past; other requests have been from teachers who wanted help in directing their students to the best printed materials on Tennessee history; still other requests have come from people of this state and of other states who wanted to learn more about Tennessee.

It was with a view to answering these requests that the compilers of this book began their work more than two years ago. The need for such a work was also recognized by the Tennessee Historical Commission, which early gave its approval to the project and agreed to publish the finished product.

At the outset it was necessary to establish certain limitations on the scope of the work. First, the listing of books and articles would be selective. No attempt would be made to publish a complete list of everything in print on Tennessee history, because this would result in the burying of the most worthwhile works among other works of little or no value except to a very few highly specialized scholars. Secondly, the listing would be limited, by and large, to materials generally available in libraries over the state. Rare and hard-to-obtain items would be included only where they represented the only or very best work in print on a given subject. Third, since there was already in print a volume Writings on Tennessee Counties, a revised edition of which was in preparation, no local or county histories would be included in the present listing except in the case of works of rare and unusual merit whose content had broader application and value than for the county or locality itself. In short, our goal was to publish a list of the best and most authoritative books and articles on Tennessee history that were likely to be available to the general reader, the teacher, and the student.

In preparing this listing more than 3,500 entries were collected from the card catalog of the Tennessee State Library and Archives, from tables of contents of scholarly journals dealing with Tennessee history, from the annual article "Writings on Tennessee History" in the East Tennessee Historical Society's Publications, from the annual volumes Writings on American History published by the American Historical Association, and from bibliographies of major works on Tennessee history. These items were arranged under the various topical headings used in the guide, and then were reduced in number within each topic so that the final selection would provide as comprehensive and authoritative a coverage of the topic as possible. The process of selection was extremely difficult, and undoubtedly there will be users of the guide who would have included some items which we have excluded, and who would have omitted articles that we retained. And this is as it should be. The compilers make no claim to infallibility in their selections, only to honesty in their intent.

We would be remiss if we did not acknowledge the generous help of many individuals who shared with us our interest and work on the project. Mrs. Gladys Bracy spent countless hours locating entries and typing cards for them, a job that she performed with cheerful willingness and with careful attention to detail and accuracy. Mrs. Ruth Kennedy located and typed additional entries, typed the entire final draft, and saved us from a number of errors through her careful reading of the manuscript. Mrs. Kennedy and Mrs. Ruth Armstrong proofread the work in its various stages of production and helped check the work for accuracy. Miss Isabel Howell, director of the library division, and Mrs. Gertrude M. Parsley, reference librarian, of the State Library and Archives, offered a number of helpful suggestions and gave graciously of their time to help locate certain of the items. The compilers, of course, assume full responsibility both for the selection and arrangement of the entries and for any errors that may have escaped our eyes.

HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

A glance at the table of contents will reveal that the arrangement of this bibliography is topical. These topics are, in general, arranged in a chronological sequence to one another, except for sections 32 to 36. The entries in the latter sections seemed to defy topical placement within the chronological pattern, and therefore were grouped at the end of the volume. Readers are therefore cautioned to check these sections and the section "General Histories" for additional references to subjects listed within the chronological pattern.

Within each topic the individual entries are arranged alphabetically by name of author, except for section 36, "Biography," where it was felt that the needs of the reader would be served better with an alphabetical arrangement by subject, and within subject by author. Some books and articles have a somewhat broader import than for the topic under which they are listed, but the compilers did not enter the same item in more than one category unless the item in question possessed major significance for two or more topics.

In the matter of bibliographical form one or two comments are necessary. In all book entries the publication data given are for the most recent printing or publication of the work in question. In the case of articles it has seemed advisable to make the entries a little less cumbersome, and for this reason alphabetical symbols have been substituted for the titles of the most frequently cited periodicals (i. e., THQ for Tennessee Historical Quarterly). A list of these alphabetical symbols is given on page viii.

The section titled "Notes" consists of blank pages which have been provided for users of this guide who want to list additional titles that either were not included in the present listing or are yet to be published.
